I mean, there's no doubt about that. And that's what every business does every family does. You need to assess your finances on a regular basis. Why in Pennsylvania, I've been a fan of zero-based budgeting starting every year looking at your budget, figuring out what are the things that are appropriate, what needs to be done, and a number of years ago, a group there were about 12 to 15 of us that we were stuck at a budget impasse with our liberal governor. And we decided we spent the summer in a conference room in Harrisburg going line by line through the budget, figuring out areas where we could bring in that wasteful spending.” [The Wilkow Majority, Ryan Mackenzie joins Andrew Wilkow, 1:00, 9/7/23] (AUDIO) Zero-Based Budgeting Was “A Method Of Budgeting In Which All Expenses Must Be Justified For Each New Period.” “Zero-based budgeting (ZBB) is a method of budgeting in which all expenses must be justified for each new period. The process of zero-based budgeting starts from a ‘zero base,’ and every function within an organization is analyzed for its needs and costs. The

		budgets are then built around what is needed for the upcoming period, regardless of whether each budget is higher or lower than the previous one.” [Investopedia, 4/23/23] “Republican U.S. Sen. Ron Johnson indicated that Medicare and Social Security should be subjected to annual budget deliberations, a move that could upend guaranteed benefits relied upon by millions of Americans. Johnson, who is running for a third term in November in a race that could shape the balance of power in the Senate, made his comments Tuesday during an interview on the Regular Joe Show, hosted by Joe Giganti. Federal spending is in two baskets — discretionary spending which comes in annual appropriations in areas like defense and public works and mandatory spending that is generally governed by statute and includes entitlement programs like Social Security and Medicare that provide guaranteed benefits. During the interview, Johnson was asked about the PACT Act — aid to veterans who have been exposed to toxic burn pits — and a controversy over discretionary vs. mandatory spending. In his answer, Johnson suggested that he seeks to turn everything in the federal budget into discretionary spending — including Social Security and Medicare — so that programs can be evaluated and fixed.” [Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, 8/2/22]

The Bipartisan Infrastructure Law will deliver resources to remove these lead pipes, in line with President Biden’s goal of removing 100% of lead service lines. The Bipartisan Infrastructure Law invests $15 billion towards LSLR through the DWSRF. With this investment, 49% of funds will be provided to communities as grants or principal forgiveness loans. State match is not required.” (EPA, 12/22/23) “The EPA is making $3 billion from the bipartisan infrastructure law available to states to replace lead drinking water pipes, the White House announced Thursday. The funding is part of $15 billion Congress provided for lead service line replacement in annual installments through 2026. The money is being distributed by states through the Environmental Protection Agency’s Drinking Water State Revolving Fund. The EPA expects the funding to help replace 1.7 million lead pipes across the US.” (Bloomberg Law, 05/02/24)

They planned to remove water pipes made of lead, a toxin that can permanently damage children’s brains. But they skipped the tenement building where Bautista and her two kids lived. They dug up pipes only at the homes of those who paid or took out loans for thousands of dollars, as well as under the public streets. Worse, the removal work risked causing a significant spike of toxic water for weeks, maybe months, in the homes of those unable to pay for it.” (Guardian, 07/20/22) Kamala Harris, who spent years trying to get the government to replace the millions of lead pipes still impacting Americans, and predominantly impacting communities of color, “made replacing lead pipes a centerpiece of the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law,” securing $15 billion to do just that. Thanks to Susan Wild’s voting to pass the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law, it helped to address “historic racial injustice,” to “protect the health of our communities,” “as many as 10 million homes rely on lead service pipes and 400,000 schools and child care facilities are also at risk of exposure.” Kamala Harris, in February 2024, announced a $5.8 billion investment in water infrastructure projects, including lead pipe replacement, from the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law, saying “clean water is a right.” “President Biden signed a $1 trillion infrastructure bill into law Monday, enacting a key piece of his domestic spending agenda that will funnel billions to states and local governments to upgrade outdated roads, bridges, transit systems and more.” (NPR, 11/15/21)

		Infrastructure Law – to deliver clean drinking water to families and children across America. These game-changing investments will put American plumbers and pipefitters to work replacing all of the America’s lead pipes and service lines and making other critical upgrades. All families, children, and Americans should be able to turn on the faucet at home or school and drink clean water — including in low-income communities and communities of color that have been disproportionately affected by dangerous lead pipes – while we also create good paying jobs remediating lead paint in homes.” (White House, 12/16/21) “According to the White House, as many as 10 million homes rely on lead service pipes and 400,000 schools and child care facilities are also at risk of exposure.” (CBS News, 04/05/23) “Harris ran for Senate in 2016 and won. She sponsored legislation centered on environmental justice during her time there, including signing onto the Green New Deal. But Harris offered her own bills, too, such as the ‘Clean School Bus Act,’ which would have replaced school buses with electric models; the ‘Water Justice Act,’ designed to reduce lead and other drinking water contaminants; the ‘Environmental Justice For All Act,’ which would have stood up a variety of programs to address disproportionate impacts on communities of color and low income; and the ‘Climate Equity Act,’ calling on budget offices in Congress and the White House to consider environmental justice for legislation and regulations, respectively. None of those bills passed, but similar programs have popped up in the Biden administration. Under the infrastructure law, EPA has $15 billion to replace lead pipes to improve drinking water as well as $5 billion to provide electric school buses. In addition, the administration has set up the White House Environmental Justice Advisory Council

Activists appreciated that Harris has been the public face of many of those efforts.” (E &amp; E News, 07/25/24) HEADLINE: Kamala “Harris Announces $5.8 Billion For Water Infrastructure Projects, Says Clean Water Is A Right.” (Associated Press, 02/20/24) “The Biden administration announced Tuesday that states will share $5.8 billion in federal funds for water infrastructure projects around the country, paid for by one of its key legislative victories. The new round of funding will help pay for projects nationwide, bringing the total awarded to states for water infrastructure improvements to $22 billion. The money comes from the $1 trillion bipartisan infrastructure law that President Joe Biden signed in 2021, according to the White House [...] Harris said more than $200 million of the new federal funding will go to Pennsylvania, one of several states that will help determine whether Biden is reelected in November. The money will go toward replacing lead pipes and aging water mains and storm drains, she said.” (Associated Press, 02/20/24)
